

Demonstration(Celebration) of CAS

CAS is one of the most challenging and rewarding parts of the IB Diploma, and as such you should celebrate your take the opportunity to celebrate your achievements. This also can be a fitting climax to your school career. Knowledge of your school's experiences may help to lift the profile of the school through local newspaper and help strengthen with your local community.

In many cases CAS experiences happen unnoticed by other members of the school and local community, so celebrating those rises awareness of what you have done.

Informing others of your CAS experiences may also lead them to build on your efforts and extend your work. This is especially relevant to experiences involving services. By being exposed to your service learning achievements, others may see the opportunities to implement similar work in different contexts, or to continue the work you have done.

Examples of celebrating CAS:

School assemblies:

Organize an assembly about your CAS experiences or projects. You could ask your school to organize for time to take chance to talk to your peers about your particular project.

To see your name in print and your activity celebrated is a great reward; it will also promote the activity to other people and promote the school in local community.

Celebrating CAS with your own project website

Setting a website not only recognizes and celebrates your efforts, it can also publicise your achievements to the world at large and help raise interest in your projects. If the project involves fund-raising, this provides you with the opportunity to explain why the project is worthy of support from different sponsors that they should be helping you to achieve your project's aim.

CAS fairs

Organise a CAS fair, where members of local community are invited to join the fair, as well as students from other schools can attend. This could be a great success as wider community will learn what you are doing to contribute to your wellbeing.
